

Reflection

My reflection about last weeks lecture. My insights are that some opinions are really similar but some are really different. We got to hear some great quotes from the big Steve Jobs and some other people where they say things like: do things on intuition and to follow your heart, that everything happens for a reason, don't look back at the mistakes but learn from them. All great quotes but I think they don't really match to everybody because everybody is different but I still agree with most of it because for a lot of people it is happiness to do something you love to do and can do it for the rest of your life, but for some people it is more important to make enough money to stay alive even when it's doing something they rather not do. That's how unfair life is. You don't always have the option to choose what you wanna do that means that you gotta do what you gotta do. It's always about money, but 9/10 it isn't that's what makes it so hard for people, at least for me because I wanna do something I love to do but make enough money to live the lifestyle I want to live and if that means I have to do something I don't really enjoy, I probably will do it because it gives me a life I would love to live and that makes me happy so in some way that's following your dreams/heart and happiness. I guess that's also what innovation is about, It's about thinking different and to not follow the rules and make your own kind of rules and explore the boundaries of your own fantasy and the capability of thinking outside the box. Thinking about that I think it is possible for me to do a job I really love with a paycheck that isn't great but if the difference between happiness is too big it would be impossible to decline the job I rather not do over the other but the paycheck is way better. That's something really personal but really see it that because happiness for me is a life without the worries of money and with that you can make a lot of people even happier. On the other hand, I think it has to do with my family in Morocco (my roots are Moroccan) because they are pretty much poor and don't have the 'luxury' that we have right now, so I would love to be able to give them this kind of life and show them there is more to this life with money and making life easier for them. So with that being said a good paycheck won't only make me smile but it would also make the people around me smile more, I guess? and I at least hope so because sometimes you have to look further than just your own happiness.
